This is a correction note.

The first change was functional: new public doors were added on the front page.

The second change was editorial: those doors needed clearer correction framing.

The first version of this article was too mixed.

It argued design taste and logo history at the same time.

That made the correction less clear than it should be.

So this is the corrected version of the correction:

- what was corrected
- why it was corrected
- what remains unresolved

What Was Corrected

1. Missing doors were made visible.

X, GitHub, YouTube, and Bandcamp are now linked from the same public surface.

2. The correction framing was made explicit.

The article now clearly states what changed and why.

Why This Is A Correction

Because the issue was not only design.

It was readability.

Readers should be able to see the actual public doors without hunting for them.

At the same time, the site should not feel like ad inventory.

So this correction balances both: visibility without promotion tone.

Current state:

- links are live
- correction framing is now explicit
- visual refinements continue

RELATION MEMORY

CORRECTS The Front Page Stopped Being Enough · Corrects the public surface after the archive and navigation problem became visible.

RETURNS TO Recognition Is Not Verification · The surface must not invite readers to mistake recognizable signs for evidence.

SYSTEM REQUIREMENT This Stopped Being Just One Website · A multi-room site needs clearer links and logos than a single-page surface.
